ALVERTON.

ALVERTON, March 1.—When the news of the dastardly assault upon Miss Schelar became known to the community, a feeling of sympathy and pity expressed for the poor girl and her mother, who had a decided determination to see that justice shall be done out to her assailant.

Miss Schelar is well known here and her many friends extend to her their sympathy and desire to see that justice be done in this case. It is only a crime against the young lady and not every woman and man in our community.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obitinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the nervous system to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. This "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in normal condition and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "Just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM...it pays better. But you are thinking of the care not the profit, so there's nothing "Just as good" for you. Say so.

THE PROPER SPIRIT OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

An active, earnest and public-spirited Chamber of Commerce is the best commercial asset of any town or city, but such bodies are rare.

They always start out with virtuous intentions, but they too frequently become corrupted by the moths of sloth, false enthusiasm of private interests, or the poison snakes of jealousy.

There is always in every community an element which is willing to betray the public interests for private advancement. The flesh is weak.

There is also the element which worships at its own shrine, which bows in daily adoration to its own image, which seeks by every possible means to impress its importance, real or fancied, upon the world.

The Chamber of Commerce which does things for a community is the body of business men who frown down unworthy men and motives and never see sight of the private purpose of the organization. The motto of every Chamber of Commerce should be "The Public Good."

Every officer of every Chamber of Commerce who attempts to prostitute his high and honorable position to private gain or personal advancement should be ignominiously pulled down and cast out.

It is the duty of every newspaper to support its local Chamber of Commerce and to even forest some of its defects in the larger purpose of encouraging its better possibilities. In its treatment of the Chamber of Commerce, the newspaper should never be capriciously critical.

Let these observations should be understood, we may say in explanation that they do not refer to any particular Chamber of Commerce, but to all of them afflicted with the ills referred to.

THE ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

The United States Senate is composed of a number of great statesmen, but a majority of political politicians, drunken with democracy and almost careless from holding their heads to the ground.

A majority voted for the election of United States Senators by the people, a popular but which in late years has been exploited by the spirits of Political Unrest. The advocates of the change have nothing more substantial to say in its support than that the Legislature are sometimes bribed and sometimes elect Senators who should not be elected.

Will the election of Senators by the people make matters any better?

The exact science of politics, such as the reformers for, elects all other officers from President down to Township Constable by popular vote. There is no reason why it cannot elect United States Senators.

Neither is there any reason to believe that popular elections would result in the choice of better men. Some of the ablest Senators who ever sat in the northern end of the Capitol would never have been elected by the popular vote, not because of any lack of intrinsic worth, but because they had and saving fact that they were not politicians familiar with the arts and graces of campaigning.

The Fathers of the Constitution very wisely planned that the Senate should be a conservative body, acting always as a buffer between the direct representatives of the people, sometimes hot with political excitement, and an executive perhaps just as radical in the advocacy of measures and every This spirit of conservatism sometimes prevents the enactment of progressive and proper laws. It is true, but it more often prevents hasty and ill-considered legislation. In short, it does more good than harm, and we question the wisdom of changing it.

Every day is Patriots' Day in the Conneltsville public schools, according to the edict of Superintendent Deffenbaugh. The worthy Superintendent never made a better rating. The ruling simply continued means that the Conneltsville public schools have no education every day and Superintendent Deffenbaugh seems quite certain that his schools will come under such a classification.

It is very wrong in right, but it is an insult to the Prince of Peace to fight within the sacred portals of his temple.

The Western Maryland is actually among us and will soon be one of us.

The Conneltsville postoffice is also on its way. It has been a long time coming, but that will only make it the more welcome. The union depot had better hurry up.

If the Conneltsville reaction doesn't look out it will have a central selling agencies as it has centers.

GEO. W. CAMPBELL ANNOUNCES FOR AN IMPORTANT OFFICE.

Prominent Citizen and Business Man of Conneltsville Submits His Candidacy for Register of Wills and Clerk of the Orphans Court to the Republican Voters of the County—His Splendid Public and Private Record.

Political Advertisement.

When the message quivered over the wires from Washington that Fayette county had leaped above the 150,000 mark it meant, among other things, that the county chose a Register of Wills and Clerk of the Orphans Court at the next election. Now, after an enviable Republican record throughout all the years of his voting life, George W. Campbell, of Conneltsville, is the first candidate to announce for the new office. Instead of Register and Recorder, as formerly, hereafter that office will be divided into two, Recorder of Deeds, and Register of Wills and Clerk of the Orphans Court. Mr. Campbell is an aspirant for the latter.

Mr. Campbell presents his name to the Republican voters of the county and earnestly asks their support at the June primary. A successful business man and an upright citizen, Mr. Campbell is recognized as a candidate of splendid fitness and ability. For some time his friends have urged him to announce for the office and he now does so with assurance of the earnest support of a host of friends throughout the county.

Since he became 20 years of age Mr. Campbell has been interested in politics, and has ably represented the Republican party in various capacities, including two terms in the State Legislature. He has also served as Justice of the Peace and has worked hard and earnestly for the Republican candidates at every election for the past 30 years. While he enters and works in Springfield township, the place of his birth, he saw that township transferred from the Democratic column to the Republican side, where it still remains. The Republicans of this district repeatedly elected him their delegate to State and County conventions.

Mr. Campbell was born at Normalville, in Springfield township, on May 18, 1852, in which vicinity he lived until 1899, when he moved to Conneltsville. He began his commercial career on April 20, 1867, when he became a clerk in his brother's store at Normalville. He rapidly acquired a thorough knowledge of the mercantile business, and, in 1876, he became a partner in the store, the business being operated under the name of J. F. Campbell & Bro. The partnership proved most successful and continued until 1899, when Mr. Campbell bought out his brother's interest and continued in the business alone. Four years later, however, he met a serious reverse through a fire which destroyed the store and stock. He was undaunted, however, and immediately rebuilt. Through business enterprise and marked ability Mr. Campbell built up a fine trade and continued to prosper, but on May 17, 1906, a second fire destroyed his store and property. He lost everything. He then retired from the Normalville field and moved to Conneltsville, where he again engaged in the mercantile business. He so continued for 18 months, during which time he became secretary of the Dunlap-Conneltsville Coke Company and the Northern Conneltsville Coke Company. After selling out his mercantile business he became secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Dunlap-

Conneltsville Coke Company, which would have to retain possession of the South Penn charter. The Pennsylvania paid well for it.

The County Controller is now in control. Washington loses a number of good men next week.

Home Course In Poultry Keeping

III.—Poultry Houses and Furniture.

By MILO M. HASTINGS,
Formerly Poultryman at Kansas Experiment Station, Commercial Poultry Expert of the United States Department of Agriculture, Author of "The Dollar Hen."

THERE are two ways in which money is lost in the poultry house construction. The first method, which is the way many farmers lose their money, is by giving the fowls such poor quarters that they have no protection against the weather and predatory animals. On the other hand, village poultrymen, and especially the novice who proposes to take up poultry keeping as a profession, very frequently lose money by building more elaborate and expensive poultry houses than there is any need for.

Indeed, many houses are built so tight and warm that poultry kept in them are less healthy than they would be in a house of a small fraction of the cost. There are throughout the eastern states a number of defective poultry plants in which the cause of failure is now attributed to the idea of poultry house construction which prevailed ten or fifteen years ago. At that time houses were made with putty joints and entirely enclosed, so that the chickens while roosting in the house at night were kept so warm that they caught cold upon going out into the weather next morning. The present tendency is toward lighter, cheaper, better ventilated buildings.

The two general forms of poultry houses in use are the long house and the colony house. The long house has several pens under one roof and is adapted to the village poultryman who wishes to keep several breeding pens of fowls and who must keep them yarded. The farmer or egg farmer poultry house or house on the type of the colony house—that is, the house which is to contain one flock of fowls.

Simple House Best.
The house must be planned for the hen's comfort. Any embellishment or fancy work that is added to please the owner should not be charged up against the productive powers of the hen, for she needs a place to sleep, eat and scratch out of the weather and to escape the heat of the sun. The interior of the house should be lined with a light-colored material, such as white wash or a light-colored paint. The floor should be covered with a layer of straw or a similar material, and the house should be well ventilated.

The poultry house should be only high enough for the keeper to stand erect, any greater space being a waste and making the house colder in winter. The house should contain about five square feet of floor space per hen if the fowls are yarded, while the fowls on free range may get on with somewhat less space. The interior of the house should be lined with a light-colored material, such as white wash or a light-colored paint. The floor should be covered with a layer of straw or a similar material, and the house should be well ventilated.

Good Drainage is Vital.
The poultry house should be located upon the best drained soil available on the farm. The ground soil that will still grow crops is desired for poultry. If the poultry house be located on pure sand there will be no green crop and insect life for the fowls to furnish feed and amusement, and then results will be little better than upon bare board floors.

On the farm the hen should be separated as far as possible from the hogpen, especially if heavy breeds are kept; otherwise the hogs in snapping at fowls that are stealing their feed may learn the taste of chicken flesh. Poultry may be placed near the orchard, but coops for young chicks should not be put under trees, especially with Leghorns, as the young stock will form the habit of roosting in the trees, and serious trouble will be experienced when the cold weather comes on. It is usually impractical to locate poultry houses so that the hens will not find the garden, and we must choose between fencing the hens or the garden.

A stone foundation is best for the poultry house that is permanently located, but where stone is expensive this may be replaced by cedar, hemlock or Oregon orange posts. Cedar houses are best built on hemlock mud sills cut like old runners so they may be moved to fresh ground.

Floors may be constructed of rough boards or cement. Cement floors are excellent, but if well constructed are expensive, and the constructed cement floors will not last. Board floors are common and are preferred by many poultrymen, but built close to the ground they harbor rats, while if open underneath they make the house cold. Earth floors are generally most satisfactory for houses for mature fowls. It is always desirable to grade up the site of the poultry house so that the water will run away from the building. Where the soil is heavy this is essential, for dampness in a poultry house is an evil which must be overcome.

The walls of the chicken house must first of all be wind tight. The cheapest way to obtain this is to use upright boards and batten the cracks. Various kinds of lap-siding give similar results. Single board walls may be greatly improved by lining with building paper, or the wall as well as the roof of the building may be covered with prepared roofing. In very cold climates the wall may be built of double boards with building paper in between.

The question of roofing is an argument between the use of shingles and of prepared roofing papers. The former are preferable, but more expensive, and where you know the make of a roofing which you are sure is durable it is usually to be chosen. One type of poultry house roof that has given excellent satisfaction is made of matched cypress boards, with no other ceiling whatever. I have seen such roofs ten years of age that were in a perfectly sound and weather-proof condition.

The most common form of roof for the long poultry house is the simple slope. In a house of fourteen feet in width a height of seven and one-half feet in front and five feet in the rear is a very good proportion. If the shingle roofing is to be used it is probably better to make the house of double pitch. This in order to get the house high enough for windows and doors, will make the cone unnecessary. The difficulty is sometimes avoided by having an eave on double pitch roof—that is, having the cone under the front side.

The object of ventilating chicken houses is to supply a reasonable amount of fresh air and, which is equally important, to keep the house dry. Ventilation should never be by means of cracks in the walls or cupolas or openings in the roof. Systems of pipes which remove the foul air from under the floor form a complication which experience has shown to be more trouble than it is worth. The most practical scheme of ventilating poultry houses is to have one or more windows in front of the house which are covered with cloth instead of glass or in free severe climates having the windows covered with poultry netting only. An opening in one side of a room, the other three sides of which are closed, will provide ample ventilation, while the fowls roosting in the far side of the compartment will keep comfortably warm and free from drafts. If dry and protected from the wind a chicken will stand pretty low temperatures without ill effects.

and offers no advantage whatever. Have roosts and all other inside poultry furniture so that it may be readily removed for cleaning and disinfecting. Put in only enough roosts to accommodate the hens and then four beneath the roosts may be separated from the rest of the house by a board set on the edge, which will prevent the droppings being washed up into the litter of the feeding floor, or the litter may be placed over a platform raised some two or three feet above the floor. In cold climates an extra cloth curtain is sometimes hung in front of the roost, thus forming a cupola. This curtain should be let down only on extremely cold nights.

Poultry Yards.
The farm poultry keeper of the old school does not yard his fowls. The fancier, who is generally a village or city dweller, is obliged to construct yards. As the fancy poultry breeders are the ones who do most of the selling of the poultry papers, the idea of enclosure has become a part of the poultryman's equipment.

Four beneath the roosts may be separated from the rest of the house by a board set on the edge, which will prevent the droppings being washed up into the litter of the feeding floor, or the litter may be placed over a platform raised some two or three feet above the floor. ## "NATOMA," A SUCCESSFUL GRAND OPERA WRITTEN BY AMERICANS, PRODUCED IN ENGLISH AND PUT ON FOR FIRST TIME IN AN AMERICAN CITY.

NEW YORK, March 1.—The production of "NATOMA," a grand opera in English, is probably the most notable event of the year in operatic and musical circles. The opera, written by Americans, produced in English and given its initial presentation in an American city, marks a new era in the operatic world, where European conquests and European longings have long reigned predominant.

The music was composed by Victor Herbert, the libretto was written by Joseph D. Redding. The opera has been produced successfully at the Philadelphia Opera House and at the Metropolitan Opera House, in New York, to the accompaniment of the Metropolitan Orchestra. The story is set in the time of the American Revolution, and the title is an Indian name.

Many public officials and foreign diplomats, etc., attended the opening New York performance. The new opera is American in theme, in scene and treatment. The story is sung in three acts. The scene lies in Santa Cruz and in Santa Barbara, Cal., with its ancient mission and its legends. The time is 1820.

DURING TEN YEARS

Steel Corporation's Gross Total Business Almost Six Billion

Some interesting figures of the operations of the United States Steel Corporation for the period covering the first ten years of its existence are published by the Wall Street Journal. In the period from April 1, 1901, to December 31, 1910, gross earnings amounted to $5,874,271,612, and the total net earnings for this period totaled $1,202,203,705, an average of approximately $120,000,000 per annum.

After deductions for depreciation, replacement funds, accounts charged on, interest on bonds, sinking funds, etc., there remained for dividends a balance of $775,783,475. Preferred dividends during this period amounted to $209,114,983, and common dividends to $121,511,200, a total of $330,626,183, leaving a surplus for the 10 year period of $871,657,292 (equivalent to about six and one-half cents per share on the common stock) which added to the $45,000,000 surplus at the beginning of business made the total surplus $926,657,292. Of this sum $217,175,184 was appropriated for the purchase of properties, construction of plants, mining, etc., and $709,482,108 was retained in the treasury.

In the same time the company produced over 30,000,000 tons of rolled and other finished steel; 95,000,000 tons pig iron; mined 182,558,588 tons of iron ore, and 20,451,574 tons of coal; manufactured 110,501,216 tons of coke; 28,123,377 barrels of cement, and 22,207,211 tons limestone.

United States Steel Corporation, it is estimated has in sight over 2,000,000 tons of iron ore.

The varied and increased use of the corporation is shown by the fact that whereas the corporation produced 186,000 barrels in 1902, in 1910 it produced nearly 8,000,000,000 barrels, an increase of 1,500 per cent.

The company has built up an extensive system of railways, now owning and operating, including second tracks, sidings, etc., 3,500 miles of track, upon which run 45,000 cars owned by the company. This service is supplemented by 80 steamers and 115 barges. The article concludes:

"Ten years of aggressive and conservative management has made the position of the United States Steel Corporation second to none in the history of a large increasing business, as well as to tide over periods of depression."

"Another favorable feature is the Steel Corporation's enormous ore, coal and limestone holdings. Holdings of raw supplies are assured for nearly a century."

APPEAL COMING
In McCormick Coal Suit Tried Twice at Somerset.

SOMERSET, Mar. 1.—Attorneys J. A. Borker and John R. Jones, who last week were beaten for the second time in court in the case affecting title to 192 acres of coal land in this county, claimed by the McCormick heirs, will take an appeal to the State Supreme Court in the matter.

Involved in the case is the practice in this State concerning the purchase of property at tax sales, which has been held to give title.

Old Jintown Ovens Are To Be Rebuilt and Filled.

The Shannon Coal & Coke Company will in the next couple of weeks commence the work of building 20 ovens and will then proceed with the development of the eight or nine acres which they still hold near their Shannon plant.

During the past three weeks this company has been making tests of the quality of the coal with a view of ascertaining the results were not found that the ashes were not what was desired.

The Shannon plant was formerly the old Jintown plant in the vicinity of Dawson. There are 12 ovens erected at the works. These have been leased from the H. C. Flick company, but it was found that they were so old that they were practically useless, and new ones will be necessary.

In building the new ovens, the old basins will be used, which will mean a great saving in the cost of erection. When completed they will be put in blast at once. The material has already been purchased for the ovens.

SIXTH DISTRICT
Produced 8,623,100 Tons of Coal Last Year.

Thomas D. Williams of Westmont, State Mine Inspector for the Sixth District has completed his annual report to be submitted to the State Department of Mines by the first of March. Mr. Williams' district extends over portions of Cambria, Somerset, Indiana and Westmoreland counties. The largest outputs in the district are credited to the Berwind-White Coal Company and the Cambria Steel Company.

Mr. Williams' report shows that there were twenty-four mines in operation in his district in 1910, compared with sixty-six in 1909; that there were 8,623,100 tons of coal mined during the past year, while there were only 7,831,116 the year previous, and that there were only 578,772 tons of coke produced compared to 551,211 tons in 1909.

"I will not," was the steady response. And then, after a little: "Mr. Grimm, the inventor of this little cap, insignificant as it seems, will receive millions for it. Your silence would be worth—just how much?"

Mr. Grimm's face turned red, then white again.

"Which would you prefer? An independence of millions of great fortune, or—of the other kind?"

Suddenly Miss Thorne tore the mask from her face and came forward. Her cheeks were scarlet, and anger flashed in the blue-gray eyes.

"Mr. Grimm has no price—no happiness to know that," she declared hotly. "Neither money nor a consideration for his own personal safety will make him turn traitor." She stared coldly into the prince's eyes. "We are not assassins here," she added.

"Miss Thorne has stated the matter fairly, I believe, your Highness," and Mr. Grimm permitted his eyes to wander to the flushed face of this woman who, in a way, was defending him. "But there is only one thing to do, Miss Thorne. He is talking to her now. There is no middle course. It is a problem that has only one possible answer—the destruction of that document, and the departure of you, and your Highness, for Italy under my personal care all the way. I suggested this matter had ended that day on the steamer; it will end here, now, tonight."

The prince glanced again at his watch, then thoughtfully weighed the persuasion cap in his hand, after which, with a curious laugh, he walked over to the small iron globe in an opposite corner of the room. He beat over it half a minute, then straightened up.

"That cap, Mr. Grimm, has one disadvantage," he remarked casually. "When it is attached to a mine or torpedo it can not be disconnected without firing it. It is attached." His turned to the prince. "It is needless to discuss the matter further just now. If you will follow me? We will leave Mr. Grimm here."

With a strange little cry, neither anger nor anguish, but only a pale face of the quality of such, he went quickly to the prince.

"How dare you do such a thing?" she demanded fiercely. "It is murder."

"This is not a time, Miss Thorne, for your interference," replied the prince coldly. "It has all passed beyond the point where the feelings of any one person, even the feelings of the woman who has rendered the compact, can be permitted to stand in the way of the consummation of this world project. Mr. Grimm alone secures the compact would be useless, if not impossible; Mr. Grimm dead means the fruition of all our plans and hopes. You have done your duty and you have done it well; but now your authority ends, and I, the special envoy of—"

"Just a moment, please," Mr. Grimm interrupted courteously. "As I understand it, your Highness, the mine in the cap will explode if you touch it. It is just happened to be here for purposes of experiment."

"Quite right," the prince laughed. "And at that point, your watch, which the mine will be fired by a wireless operator fifteen miles from here."

"Something like that," yes, very much like that," answered the prince. "Thank you, I merely wanted to understand it." Mr. Grimm pulled a chair up against the door and sat down, crossing his legs. On his knees rested the barrel of a revolver, getting, fascinating, in the semicircular mirror. "Now, gentlemen, and he glanced at his watch. "It's twenty-one minutes of three o'clock. At three that mine will explode. We will all be in the room when it happens, unless his Highness sees fit to destroy the compact."

Eyes sought eyes, and the prince removed his mask with a sudden gesture. His face was bloodless.

"If any man," and Mr. Grimm gave Miss Thorne a quick glance, "I should say, any person, attempts to leave this room I know he will die; and there is a bare chance that the percussion cap will fail to work. I can account for all of you, if there is a rush."

"But, man, if that mine explodes we shall all be killed—blown to pieces!" burst from one of the cowed figures.

"If the percussion cap works," supplemented Mr. Grimm.

Mixed emotion struggled in the flushed face of Isabel as she studied Mr. Grimm's impassive countenance.

"I have never disappointed you yet, Miss Thorne," he remarked as if it were an explanation. "I shall not now."

She turned to the prince.

"Your Highness, I think it needless to argue further," she said. "We have no choice in the matter; there is only one course—destroy the compact."

"Not," was the curt answer.

"I believe I know Mr. Grimm better than you do," she argued. "You think he will weaken; I know he will not. I am not arguing for him, nor for myself; I am arguing against the fearful loss that will come here in thirty to two thousand countenance of the secretary of state at his right, thence along the table around which the official family was gathered. It was a special meeting of the cabinet called at the suggestion of Chief Campbell, and for more than an hour he had done the talking. There had been no interruption.

"So much," he concluded, at last. "If there is any point I have not made clear Mr. Grimm is here to explain it in person."

Mr. Grimm rose at the mention of his name and stood with his hands clasped behind his back. His eyes met those of the chief executive listlessly.

"We understand, Mr. Grimm," the president began, and he paused for an instant to regard the tall, clean-cut young man with a certain admiration.

"You, Your Highness, and Miss Thorne, Will Accompany Me."

"We understand that there does not actually exist such a thing as a Latin compact against the English-speaking peoples."

"On paper, no," was the reply.

"You personally prevented the signing of the compact?"

"I personally caused the destruction of the compact after several attempts had been made," Mr. Grimm answered. "Throughout I have acted under the direction of Mr. Campbell, of course."

"You were in very grave personal danger," the president went on.

"It was of no consequence," said Mr. Grimm simply.

The president glanced at Mr. Campbell, and the chief shrugged his shoulders.

"You are certain, Mr. Grimm," and the president spoke with great deliberation. "You are certain that the representatives of the Latin countries have not met since and signed the compact?"

"I am not certain—no," replied Mr. Grimm promptly. "I am certain, however, that the backbone of the alliance was broken—only because they permitted me to learn of the wireless persuasion cap which would have placed the navies of the world at their mercy. Had I not been able to exploit their sublimity as they were able to exploit ours, and this is the condition which made the Latin compact possible, I am not sure."

"Therefore," he went on, "the Latin compact is not a reality on paper; if the United States and England do not purchase this—this wireless persuasion cap, we are right back where we were before it all happened, aren't we? Very possible danger from that direction has passed, hasn't it? The world war of which we have been talking is rendered impossible, isn't it?"

"That's a question," answered Mr. Grimm. "If you will pardon me for suggesting it, I would venture to say that as long as there is an invention of that importance in the hands of nations when we now know have been conspiring against us for fifty years, there is always danger. It seems to me, if you will pardon me young man.

"Mr. Rankin of the German embassy was on guard at the door," demanded the president quickly.

"Yes. We got out safely."

"And that means that Germany was—"

The president paused and startled glances passed around the table. After a moment of deep abstraction the secretary went on:

"So Miss Thorne and the prince escaped. Are they still in this country?"

"That I don't know," replied Mr. Grimm. He stood silent a moment, staring at the president. Somewhat changed, he entered into the hall, and his lips were set. "Perhaps I had better explain here that the personal equation enters largely into an affair of this kind," he said at last, slowly. "It happens that it entered into this. Unless I am ordered to pursue the matter further I think it would be best for all concerned to accept the fact of Miss Thorne's escape, and—"

The young man's lips closed tightly, and then:

"There are some people, Mr. President, whom we must frankly acknowledge, and we deal with them accordingly; and there are others who oppose us and yet are not enemies. It is merely that our paths of duty cross."

For a little while the silence of the room was unbroken, save for the steady tick-tock of a great clock in one corner. Mr. Grimm's eyes were fixed unflinchingly upon those of the chief executive. At last the secretary of war crumpled a sheet of paper impatiently and hitched his chair up to the table.

"I look down to the fact it's like this, isn't it?" he demanded briskly. "The Latin countries by an invention of their own which the United States and England were to be duped into purchasing—this wireless persuasion cap—were able to explode every submarine mine before attacking a port. Very well. This thing, of course, would have given them the freedom of the seas as long as we were unable to exploit their sublimity as they were able to exploit ours. And this is the condition which made the Latin compact possible, isn't it?"

"That's a question," answered Mr. Grimm. "If you will pardon me for suggesting it, I would venture to say that as long as there is an invention of that importance in the hands of nations when we now know have been conspiring against us for fifty years, there is always danger. It seems to me, if you will pardon me again, that for the sake of peace we must either get complete control of that invention or else understand it so well that there can be no further danger. And again, please let me call your attention to the fact that the brain which brought this thing into existence is still to be reckoned with. There may, some day, come a time when our submarines may be exploded at will regardless of this persuasion cap."

The secretary of war turned fully upon Chief Campbell.

"This woman who is mixed up in an affair," he demanded. "This Miss Thorne. Who is she?"

"Who is she?" repeated the chief. "She's a secret agent of Italy, one of the most brilliant, perhaps, that has ever operated in this or any other country. She is the pivot around which the intrigue moves. We know her by a dozen names; any one of them may be correct.

The brows of the secretary of war were drawn down in thought as he turned to the president.

"Mr. Grimm was speaking of the personal equation," he remarked pointedly. "I think perhaps his meaning is clear when we know there is a woman in the case. We know that Mr. Grimm has done his duty to the best of his ability; we know that alone and unaided, practically, he has done a thing that no living man of his relative position has ever done before—prevented a world-war. But there is further danger—he himself has called our attention to it—therefore, I would suggest that Mr. Grimm be relieved of further duty in this particular case. This is not a moment when the peace of the world may be imperiled by personal feelings of—of kindness for an individual."

Mr. Grimm received the blow without a tremor. His hands were still tightly clasped behind his back; the eyes fastened upon the president's face were still listless; the mouth absolutely without expression.

"As Mr. Grimm has pointed out," the secretary went on, "we have been negotiating for this wireless persuasion cap. I have somewhere in my office the name and address of the individual with whom these negotiations have been conducted. Through that it is possible to reach the inventor of this cap. I suggest that you vote our thanks to Mr. Grimm and relieve him of this particular case."

The choler eye of the president softened a little, and grew grave as he studied the impassive face of the young man.

"It's a strange situation," Mr. Grimm, he said evenly. "What do you say to withdrawing?"

"I am at your orders, Mr. President," was the reply.

"No one knows better what you have done than the gentlemen here at this table," the president went on slowly. "No one questions that you have done more than any other man could have done under the circumstances. We understand, I think, that indirectly you are asking immunity for an individual. I don't happen to know the identity of that individual, under our law but we can't make any mistake now. Mr. Grimm, and so—"

"He stopped and was silent."

"I had hoped," Mr. President, that what I have done so far—and I don't underestimate it—would have, at least, earned for me the privilege of remaining in this case until its conclusion," said Mr. Grimm steadily. "It is to be otherwise, of course I am aware."

"History tell me, Mr. Grimm," interrupted the president irreverently. "that the front of a woman's skirt has changed the map of the world. Do you believe," he went on suddenly, "that a man can mete out justice fairly, severely if necessary, to one for whom he has a personal regard?"

"I do, sir."

"Perhaps even to one—to a woman whom he might love?"

"I do, sir."

The president rose.

"Please wait in the anteroom for a few minutes," he directed.

Games Tonight.
Connellsville at McKeesport.
Johnstown at South Side.

In the presence of President Joseph M. Lethbridge of the Central league and a few score spectators the Cokers last night administered a stinging rebuke to those who intimated they would "lay down" to McKeesport. Connellsville won 40 to 27. There has been some comment about town that the Cokers would not try to defeat the Tubers, the pennant race being so close up to the hilt. That report got as far as McKeesport and as a consequence the Tubers did not stop at the Smith House when they arrived for fear there would be more talk. Instead they went to the Royal, although heretofore the Smith House has been their regular hotel. The fact that the Cokers made their headquarters at the hotel of Straub & Sherrick caused the Tubers' defection.

There was no lay-down last night. There wasn't the slightest sign of it. The Cokers were some minutes getting started but once going they could not be stopped.

At the start the Tubers began piling up points. They had the Cokers 1 to 1, 5 to 2, 8 to 3 and 9 to 3. Then the Cokers tied the score at 10 and went in the lead. McKeesport came up from behind and tied the score at 15. The half ended 22-19 in favor of the Cokers.

On the jump in the second half O'Donnell and Bogie made field goals and tied the score at 27. Andy Sears was making four goals with perfect regularity and the Tubers could not gain. For the first 10 minutes of the second half the teams were separated by only a few points. "Then came the 'break' and it helped the Cokers. Kummer, Dark, Bogie and Doherty figured in the scoring, with Ahern outjumping and outgeneraling Getzinger. Ahern played the star game of the evening in both halves, breaking up McKeesport's plays time after time, intercepting passes and using great headwork on the tap. In the second half, with 11½ minutes to play, Ahern was jammed against the cage under the Coker basket, setting a bad poke in the eye. Half a minute later, after play had been resumed, Kummer got a shove from Andy Sears and was jammed headlong against the cage in almost the same spot. Ahern was hurt. A cut on the cheek beneath the eye was the result. Kummer was taken into the Coker dressing room but after a few minutes resumed play. The game was one of the roughest McKeesport has figured in here, and there was no evident intention on the part of the players to be rowdy. The contest was fast and furious from the drop of the hat. The Cokers won because they played better basketball. The lineup:

Notes.
It was the first time President Lethbridge had seen the Connellsville team play on its home floor. He did not get out to Greensburg when the franchise was there, during his incumbency as the league executive. The league President saw a fast, clean game, although some of the spectators were not on their best behavior during the early stages.

There is nothing to this business about the team "laying down" to the Tubers. McKeesport plays a clean game all the time and it is probable that the players are better liked than those of other teams because of that fact. But the Cokers had no intention of easing up. It took them sometime to get started, but those who were there noticed they went some once they were going right. McKeesport has probably the greatest team in the country and their defense is superb. That is one reason opposing quintets are forced to take long shots.

Charlie O'Donnell, the crack Tubers forward, sums up the Cokers in a few words and has the right tone. "There are too many good shots on the Connellsville team. It is everybody.
